VALLEY REAL ESTATE 2023: OVERVIEW

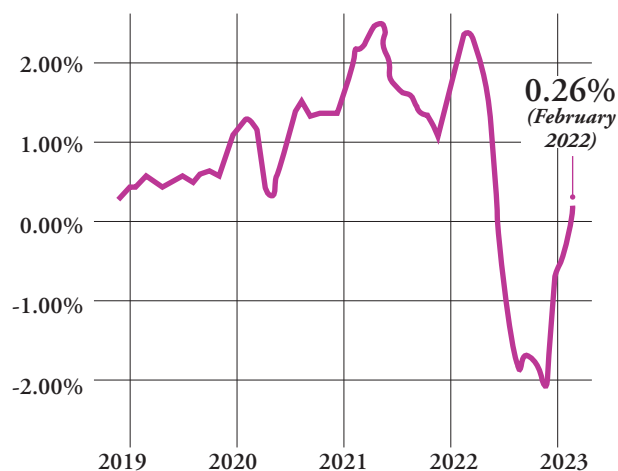

BY Sara Crocker

After riding high and leading the nation in home price gains for nearly three years, according to analyst S&P Global, Greater Phoenix fell back to Earth in 2022-2023. The buying frenzy sparked by the pandemic is in the rearview: Home prices have slipped from their high, inventory is sitting on the market longer and interest rates are keeping some buyers out. Despite those changes, home price gains long-term remain strong, and sellers are often still receiving nearly full list price, tempering concerns of the kind of crash Arizonans experienced in the aughts.

TO CURATE THIS LIST OF THE VALLEY'S TOP RESIDENTIAL REAL ESTATE AGENTS,

we surveyed 25,000 PHOENIX magazine subscribers for their opinions on agents who helped them buy or sell a home – or both – over the past 20 years. Grading the agents in five different practice areas, from closing skills to design knowledge, the respondents also offered written testimonials on the agents in question, many of which are included below. PHOENIX editors evaluated the surveys, added our own candidates to fully represent the geographic and cultural sweep of the Valley, and created a final list. To help you find the right agent, we've included the neighborhoods where the agents respectively tend to specialize, but these are only examples. Most agents will work anywhere in the Valley.

INTERVIEW WITH A FLIPPER:

Rob Binkley of EZ Homes

Rob Binkley is the last guy who'd be inclined to sugarcoat Valley real estate. As a founding owner of EZ Homes – one of the largest foreclosure acquisition and resale companies in Arizona – the longtime real estate pro tends to get busy when home values plummet. Such was the case back in 2007, when the collapse of the housing bubble triggered a five-year flood of mortgage walk-offs and deed auctions. Binkley, also an avid traveler who penned the backpacker memoir Let's Go Mad (Skyhorse, 2016), put down his snorkel for a few moments to weigh in on today's near-record housing prices. Bubble or no bubble?

Obviously, the current market is in much better shape today than it was in, say, 2012. Do you see fewer homes come up for auction?

Oh, it's not even close. We're looking at probably on average per day in Maricopa County... in terms of what is actually being put up for auction, maybe two to five homes a day. Back in 2012, it was probably 40 or 50 a day.

But that can change in a heartbeat, right? Home prices are so high right now, it stands to reason there are a lot of over-extended homeowners with mortgages they can't really afford. Could that constitute a bubble?

I think it's unlikely, primarily for one reason: more stable lending. It's interesting, back [in 2009] there wasn't a conduit to save people... there were a lot of stated loans, unverified loans, subprime loans. They got rid of all of that after the crash. Now, because the loans are very secure, with a lot of money down, and the interest rates are 3 to 4 percent on a 30-year-fixed, which is historically very low, nobody is walking away from those loans.

But mortgage rates have gone up, haven't they? To 6 or 7 percent.

They have, but only in the last 12 months. The majority of [extant] loans are in the 3- to 4-percent range. And there are very few people underwater.

Could those new interest rates trigger a home value correction?

I don't see that happening. We had a correction from last May to December. In some places, [home prices] went down 10 percent. Then the new year hit and the market stiffened up. I read something interesting the other day: The Valley gets something like 150 people net inflow every day. That creates demand. 150 new people every day wanting a house. And unemployment is still incredibly low. [The only thing] I'm really worried about is a macro-event. Putin or a banking meltdown, that triggers a recession. Other than that, it seems secure.
