To the parents who were inattentive to their pre-teenage kids at a hardware & garden center who (undoubtedly influenced by social media) decided it would be "fun" to take a can of WD40 off the shelf and spray a section of the tile floor, then hide and giggle as unsuspecting customers nearly broke their neck. Pity these kids do not understand the serious consequences of their actions and worse, that their parents were oblivious.

GARDEN TIPS

The “Buzz” about Native Plants

By Carol Schroding,
Gardening Enthusiast and former owner of Northeast Native Perennials

I guess I take a lot for granted when it comes to native plant gardening, because I've been doing it for so long! A friend reminded me of one of those things that I taught her without even realizing it. That is, choose plants for the appropriate site and conditions. For example, if you have a dry shady spot under a tree, research what native plants do well in dry shade and plan your planting accordingly. The plants will not struggle to thrive (and you will not struggle to make them thrive)! Sounds simple and even obvious, right? But what many of us who love plants often do is buy a plant we like for how it looks or the attributes of it, and plant it without considering its needs. Then we are setting ourselves and the plants up for failure.

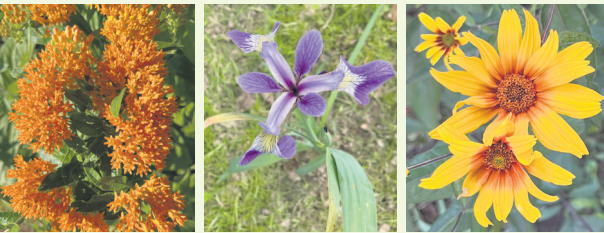

To be successful, you must first know your property and the soil and sun conditions in each area. It could vary a lot, especially with a larger property. If you have moved to a new property, or are new at gardening, this may take some time. Spend some time getting to know how much sun a particular area gets and if the soil holds moisture or drains well. You may even want to have your soil PH tested. If not, most of the soil in our area tends to be on the acidic side which is good for most native plants, so no worries.

Even within a particular area there can be variation, especially in moisture. For example, my pollinator garden gets full sun but is on a bit of a slope. Therefore, at the top of the slope, the soil dries out more quickly than at the bottom of the slope which tends to hold moisture a little longer. So, I try to place the plants that like a little more moisture, at the base of the slope.

All that being said, many of our native plants are pretty forgiving. Learning which plants will thrive in a particular environment is a worthy goal and will reward you with beautiful and beneficial gardens that require minimal intervention from you! Have fun with it!!

Next week: More beautiful and beneficial blooms for your garden!

Thriving simply because they were planted in a site that meets their very basic needs:

Orange Milkweed ( Asclepias tuberosa ) Dry & Full Sun	Iris ( Iris versicolor ) Moist & Partial Sun	False Sunflower ( Heliopsis helianthoides ) Average Moisture, Full Sun
